For the current fiscal year the revenues are estimated at $385,000,000, and expenditures at $310,000,000. Under the truce application of the sinking fund, the estimated net surplus for the current year will be $75,000,000.

Secretary Windom estimates the receipts for the year ending June 30, 1891, at $385,000,000, and his estimates of expenditures, for the same year, at $310,000,000. The difference between the two estimates will make appropriations, $75,000,000, with a net surplus of $43,000,000.

Among other obligations of the Government have been purchased and redeemed during the year amounting to $50,455,485, leaving available cash on hand $1,100,000,000. The estimate for the year ending June 30, 1891, is $1,100,000,000. The estimate for the year ending June 30, 1892, is $1,100,000,000. The estimate for the year ending June 30, 1893, is $1,100,000,000.

To-day all the talk in pugilistic and athletic circles is of the great boxing contest, which takes place to-morrow night at the Cribb Club in Boston, between Jack McAuliffe and Mike Daly.

Though it is a big-glove affair and limited to fifteen rounds, as much money is being wagered on the result as is usually bet on some noteworthy prize-fight.

Every sporting man and admirer of athletic prowess must have heard of the two men. McAuliffe is the champion of the world, and Daly is the champion of the world.

Aside from the world-wide fame of each is a potent factor in drawing the greenbacks of high denomination from well-to-do wallets.

While McAuliffe is the great favorite of the racing world, Daly is equally well liked throughout New England, and the Yankees are betting their money on him.

They are trusting on the money to attest their confidence in the skill of the boxer.

McAuliffe reports that he is in the pink of condition.

His second is Cal McCarthy, the 114-pound champion of the world, and Jimmy Lyons, the champion 125-pound man of America.

Jack Quinn, the champion Scotch light-weight, will also be in the ring, and the race, under the name of the "Big Four," will be a tremendous one.

McAuliffe has had a long experience, both as a trainer and a fighter.

Bob McLaughlin, the champion, will accompany the above-named boxer of star pugilists.

McAuliffe is said to be in the pink of condition.

Nearly 2 per cent. of the second $5,000,000 of the Guarantee Fund has been raised, and the money continues to pour in slowly, but steadily.

The ocean steamship lines have realized the source of revenue which will accrue to them from the Exposition being held in New York, and they have come forward with subscriptions amounting to $25,000,000, representing $5,000 each from the Cunard, White Star, Anchor, French and Inman lines.

It is rumored that several wealthy men are about to place their names on the list of subscribers to the fund.

There are yet also several railroad and steamboat companies who have not been heard from, and something is expected of them before many days have passed.

The fund has been subscribed to date, as shown by the records this morning, amounts to $5,000,000.

Nearly $4,000,000 was secured by THE WORLD canvassers yesterday, the total up to this morning being shown by the following list:

Mac, Nov. 29, via Zanzibar, Dec. 3.—In accordance with your instructions I left Zanzibar and arrived at Mena today. I made a rapid dash from the coast to this point with five runners, and was the first of all Europeans sent out from Zanzibar to greet Stanley, Emin Pasha and their companions.

I had a terribly hard experience after leaving Bagamoyo, the point a little to the southwest of Zanzibar, on the mainland. At Bagamoyo I found the German officials in a great state of excitement, in the expectation of the arrival of Stanley and Emin, and in making preparations to house his large force of followers special rooms were being made in readiness for the explorers.

I may say that the journey up to Mena was a brilliant dash, and I easily distanced the one of my rivals who started out a week or two ago from Zanzibar with a big lot of porters and under the protection and guardianship of the German officials.

After all the bragging of one individual while at Zanzibar that he would distance all competitors, it gives me pleasure to know that I, as the special correspondent of THE WORLD, was first to bid the great explorer halt, and to congratulate him on coming out from Africa after attaining the object for which he was sent out.

Stanley's hair has grown quite white, but he looks very sturdy. He was delighted to get within measurable distance at last to civilization, and wished THE WORLD to send his greetings to all the friends in the United States who remember him.

Stanley has been absent on his last expedition, which was organized for the relief of Emin Pasha (Dr. Edward Schnitzler), since April, 1887.

He was called from a lecture tour in the United States to take command of the expedition.

Emm Pasha was the Governor of the Equatorial province of East Africa. He was sent to a fortified position, but so surrounded by hostile forces that he was forced to surrender.

Stanley's work of opening up the country to commerce and civilization.

He has been a very successful explorer, and has been a very successful explorer, and has been a very successful explorer.

Harry Carlton, condemned to death, sat between Deputy Sheriffs Whelan and Terry in murderers' cage in the Tombs this morning. He was in his shirt-sleeves and smoking a cigar.

When an EVENING WORLD reporter entered he arose eagerly with outstretched hand and said: "Say, will you tell me the truth? Has Governor Hill refused to grant me a reprieve?"

"According to the morning papers he has," replied the reporter.

"I know that, but that news is only given as a rumor. Warden Osborne was called up on the telephone last evening by a reporter, who said that he had heard that the Governor had refused executive clemency, but that was only a rumor. I have not heard from my lawyers, and I think they would be the first to hear from the Governor and let me know."

Carlton sat down again, and after a moment's silence said:

"Will you go over to Howe & Hummel's office for me and find out for certain if the Governor has refused to grant me a reprieve?"

The reporter went to the lawyers' office and said: "I received a despatch from the Governor at 6 o'clock last night, stating that Executive clemency was refused. We have not told Carlton yet, but I think the Governor will at least grant a reprieve."

The reporter returned to the murderers' cage.

When he walked in Carlton gripped his cigar and said: "Well, how is it?"

"Well, how is it?" Carlton almost in a whisper asked.

Living in the Presbyterian Hospital this morning, weak from exposure and loss of blood, and with a big wound in his throat, is Christian Papp, an engine cleaner in the Grand Central Depot yard.

Yesterday was his pay-day. Papp came home late to his home, 313 East Thirty-ninth street, the worse for drink. He tried to keep him indoors, but he would not stay, and went out after getting something to eat.

It was not midnight when Policeman Moncrief, of the Sixty-seventh street squad, encountered a man staggering along Third avenue at Seventy-fifth street, bareheaded, his shirt front and clothes covered with frozen blood.

The man was drunk and stupid, either from exposure or the loss of blood. There was a big gash in his throat, made with a keen-edged knife.

A policeman walked his man to the station and sent for an ambulance. While the surgeon sewed up the wound and ascertained that the knife had cut nothing but the flesh, throat, Hamilton, squeezed out of the man with infinite trouble the information that he was Papp, the engine cleaner. But he could not learn how he got there.

The wound in his throat was over three inches long. It might have been made in a fight, or Papp might have made it himself. He had, however, no knife or other weapon.

After the wound was sewed up, Papp was found. A doctor examined the wound, and found that the wound was over three inches long. It might have been made in a fight, or Papp might have made it himself. He had, however, no knife or other weapon.

GROWING WARMER.
The Cold Wave Will Have Disappeared Before Night.
Although the atmosphere was 5 degrees warmer at 10.30 than it was at 7 o'clock this morning, the change was scarcely perceptible, and blue noses and red ears predominated all over town.

At 7 o'clock the mercury, which had been falling all through the night, stood at 13 degrees above zero—the coldest this far this winter.

While pedestrians were freezing in the street below Street, Dunn sat in his cozy office away up on the Equitable Building, toying with the cold-weather bait and considering what he would do next.

Their Candidate, Rankin, Is Elected on a Close Vote.
The city election in Elizabeth, N. J., yesterday was very close, and at midnight the returns had not all been received, but it was reasonably certain that John C.
